

Name: Brian Bear

Age: 7

Sex: Boy

Case Notes: Brian Bear's mother thought he was doing badly at school because he couldn't see the blackboard, but Brian's eyes were fine – there was another reason why he found reading and writing so hard.

Doctor R Spot

Brian had spent the day with his friend Humphrey. Humphrey's dad had cooked a yummy Sunday lunch, and the two friends had spent the afternoon riding their bikes along the track by the river. Brian was a bit wobbly on his bike. He just couldn't seem to balance, steer and pedal all at the same time. Humphrey was a really good bike rider and he raced ahead.

"Wait for me!" called Brian.

On his way home, Brian suddenly found a car driving straight towards him on the same side of the road! Beep-beep! The car swerved around Brian and screeched to a halt. Brian wobbled like mad and just managed to stop without falling off.

Mr Antelope jumped out of the car. "What do you think you're doing on the wrong side of the road?" he shouted. He was very cross!

"Sorry, Mr Antelope," said Brian. "I didn't think I was on the wrong side."

"Well, you should know your left from your right at your age, Brian!" snapped Mr Antelope angrily, and he drove off in his car, a bit too fast!
